A wreck on the Missouri Pacific last than local impo night, five miles south of Fort West demonstrated that Fort Worth was railroad center, and that all trunk line led to this city. A locomotive on freight train jumped the track effectually blocked all traffic on the Missourl Pacific track for hours. The southbound Missouri Pacific passenger train was in the yards here waiting to go south, and the northbound Missouri Pacific passenger was just bouth of the wreck. In this dilemma the Santa Fe track was called into requiration. The southbound pulled out to Ceburne thence to Alvarado, were the Missouri Pacific was reached a come train sped on its way to San Antonio. The north-bound backed down to Alvarado then went over to Cleburne and came on to Fort Worth. Had the Santa Fe been blocked in any way the trains could have proceeded to Midlothian and come in and gone out over the Fort Worth and New Orleans. Nothing like being a railroad center, it is a good thing
